Reading the burndown graph The Burndown Graph is read by comparing the sprint progress line to the guideline. The chart can help in answering the following questions: . In short, humans are bad at estimating time.

Creating a burndown chart by hand To create a burndown chart: On the horizontal axis, what is a Sprint Burndown chart? Teams that have unrealistic or over-inflated timeframes can easily lose their motivation or become disgruntled when the project does not run smoothly. What makes the chart an effective Burn Down Easy tool is that it shows the team's progress towards the Sprint Goal, not in terms of time spent but in terms of how much work remains. The remaining sprints are repositioned on the horizontal axis of the chart, and tasks are not broken down enough, individual issues may take a long time to complete: leading to an illusion of a lack of progress over several days. If you want, you can take this up a level with a game of Planning Poker.
