He too ended his history section with the arrival of the trainline, but minus any predictions about Prague entering a period of renewed glory. Almost immediately it became evident that the site was extremely promising and archaeological results were outstanding, as far as possible exhibits for the future National Museum were concerned. semi-industrial area: a chimney, factories, the Vltava, docks, shacks, workhorses, and workers. For Foucault, history was a new way to explain reality through empirical examination; it is, nonetheless, not a form of order in the sense that it may establish assurance with regard to human existence. Sacred and secure, you are protected and revered, rewarded for all you have put in to release yourself from the shackles of the past and allow yourself the freedom to move into the magical realm of miracle consciousness.

They continue to lead many who are just beginning to open their minds to a great
