He utilises devices such as structure, literary devices and characterisation to emphasise the fear apparent in the text. And yet the arrangement of the lines on the page and the overall rhythm create a musical flow. Almost immediately, this difficulty is seen as a necessary function of the poetic process:

However, not too long ago, the forge was an essential part of Irish rural life. His whole profession is automatically opposed to this; the shoddy tin of today's automobiles contrast with the toughness of the iron produced and manipulated at the forge.
