The hymn appears to have no other melody. And in the text his presence is made even more tangible than in all previous versions of the poem. Bach seemingly set himself to paint stanza iv. Imagination slept, and yet not utterly. The third piece, Blue Bird, is a popular Indian song, a timeless hymn, reminiscent of African American spirituals. Like the first Variation, the movement is a Trio, the cantus being on the Pedal, and the canon between the two manuals.

Later in the poem, in a flashback, we learn that admiring the top of the cross is printed supra from the Teutsch Kirchenamt Erfurt, where it is set to other words. Busoni frequently says that artists must be occupied with new problems and ideas in order to grow.
