The three men are Confucius, Buddha, and Lao Zi, respectively. When Li received the news of his imperial reprieve, he returned down the river to Jiangxi passing on the way through Baidicheng in Kuizhou Prefecture, still engaging in the pleasures of food, wine, good company, and writing poetry; his poem "Departing from Baidi in the Morning" records this stage of his travels, as well as poetically mocking his enemies and detractors, implied in his inclusion of imagery of monkeys. Here it is hoped to present an insight into a very narrow field of translation; the translation of poetry, and not just poetry but Tang dynasty poetry, and not just Tang dynasty poetry, but Tang dynasty regulated poetry written by Du Fu.
